Description of the student group, its responsibilities and interests

Regulations for student groups:

A university group may, with regard to its areas of responsibility, serve only as a supplement to the student body's governing bodies established under the Higher Education Act and may not assume any responsibilities of the existing student self-government. A university group must pursue a social, cultural, or charitable interest in the interest of all students in the student body and is, in principle, open to all members of the student body. University groups do not have signing authority and regulate their internal affairs themselves in accordance with their bylaws. University groups may not charge membership fees and are required to maintain a cash book recording their income and expenses. Upon request by the AStA Chair, the AStA Finance Office, or the StuPas, an accounting report must be submitted to the AStA Finance Office and the Finance Committee. When applying for financial funds from the student budget, the cash book must be disclosed retroactively up to the most recent audit. Purchases made by university groups are the property of the student body. University groups are therefore required to maintain an inventory list of their purchases. Upon the dissolution of a university group, all finances, the cash book, and all purchases must be handed over to the Student Parliament. Should any of the rules for university groups stipulated in the bylaws not be observed, the StuPa may revoke the university group's registration.
